Calcium/calmodulin-dependent protein kinase IV attenuates wound healing in dermal fibroblast through the Wnt/ β -catenin signaling pathway. Wound repair is a highly complex and dynamic process, including many types of cell-cell interactions and participation of cytokines. It is now clear that Wnt/ β -catenin signaling pathway plays an important role in skin wound repair. Calcium/calmodulin-dependent protein kinase IV (CaMKIV) has been recently reported to participate in the regulation of cell proliferation and migration in a number of cell types. In this study, we demonstrated the effects of CaMKIV on skin wound healing in vivo and in vitro. Using CaMKIV knockout mice (CaMKIV(DKO)), we examined the influence of CaMKIV on skin wound healing. Compared with the WT mice, mice lacking CaMKIV exhibited a striking acceleration of wound closure. In vitro, CaMKIV deficiency in WT mouse fibroblasts (FB) leads to augmented scratch wound closure and migration. Conversely, the inhibition of Wnt/ β -catenin signaling pathway by SB216763 or overexpression of Dsh can restore the impaired wound repair effects of CaMKIV(DKO) FB. Moreover, both SB216763 and overexpression of Dsh can reverse the enhanced expression of fibronectin in CaMKIV(DKO) FB. Our data suggest that CaMKIV may inhibit Wnt/ β -catenin signaling pathway to attenuate wound healing in FB, implying that CaMKIV may act as a
